PRIMARY school pupils were joined by elite swimmers to celebrate 500 days to go until the start of the 2012 Paralympic Games.

Medallist and lifelong Hackney resident, Dervis Konuralp, and 2012 hopeful, Lauren Smith, met children from Gayhurst primary at London Fields Lido.

Paralympic tickets are due to go on sale in September. Games organisers have announced a whole range of measures to ensure that disabled sports fans and their friends and family can attend their chosen event. There is also still time for residents to apply for tickets to the Olympics, which can cost as little as £16. For info on disability sports in Hackney, and ticket applications, see pages 8&9.

CRIME 12-YEAR LOW

CRIME in Hackney is at its lowest level for 12 years, according to the latest figures.

Met Police statistics for 2010/11 show there was a 2.5 per cent reduction in total offences in Hackney – which means 700 fewer crimes. Offences have fallen by 11,000 in nine years, one of the largest overall reductions in London. Hackney Police Borough Commander, Chief Superintendent Steve

Bending, said: “When talking about percentages it is easy to forget that what is actually achieved is a significant reduction in the number of victims of crime and an increase in the number of criminals being brought to justice.”

“Surveys of Hackney residents continue to show very high levels of confidence in the local police. We do not take any of these successes for granted and this year will see Hackney Police continue to fight and investigate crime and support victims to the very best of our ability.”

There were four murders in Hackney, compared to eight in 2009. Serious sexual offences dropped by 30 (10 per cent); and serious violence by 122 (26 per cent). Residential burglary, which saw a rise in 2009/10, was down by 137 offences (9 per cent). Gun crime, which rose by 54 offences in 2009/10, was also down by 78 (43 per cent). Serious youth violence was down by 53 offences (21 per cent); and domestic violence by 348 offences (18 per cent). Racist or religious hate crime was down by 67 offences (17 per cent), while there were 14 fewer homophobic offences (25 per cent).

Mayor of Hackney, Jules Pipe, said: “I’m pleased that violent crime, gun crime and crime overall, have fallen significantly. Alongside this overall drop I’m also encouraged to see that more perpetrators of traditionally under-reported crimes such as domestic violence are being punished. However, we recognise there is still more to be done and we are committed to working with our partners to make Hackney a safer place.”

Some of the issues to be tackled include knife crime, which rose by six per cent, and motor vehicle theft which increased by three per cent.

Targeting crime on the street

A TARGETED police initiative in Manor House has seen some crimes fall by nearly 80 per cent during a six-month period.

A 'dispersal zone' focused on the Hackney side of Manor House Tube station came into force on 20 September last year.

The police and Council joint initiative came in response to local concerns around anti-social behaviour and a rise in cash-point robbery.

The operation resulted in personal robbery, theft against the person, and harassment falling by 77 per cent, compared to the previous six months.

Creating a dispersal zone gives police the power to ask groups of people to move along where their behaviour has caused or looks likely to cause harassment, alarm or intimidation.

Over the six month period, 350 notices to disperse were given, with 21 arrests made.

Chief Inspector Jane Easton, of Hackney Police, said: "Although the operation has now come to an end, Hackney Police will continue to work with our partners at the Council to monitor the area closely."

Cllr Sophie Linden, Cabinet Member for Crime, Sustainability and Customer Services, added: "These results are extremely encouraging, and demonstrate how working together and targeting resources can have a positive effect on crime and anti-social behaviour."

Police will continue to work with our partners at the Council to monitor the area closely

Police have been delivering burglary warnings to homes

Burglary warning for residents

RESIDENTS are reminded to be extra vigilant, amid concerns that burglars may target empty properties during bank holidays. Hackney Police and the Council suggest the following:

- Keep keys, valuables and ID documents away from doors, windows and letter boxes
- Always lock doors and windows when leaving the house
- Leave a light on a timer if going away for more than a day, and keep a light on if you're coming home after dark
- If you have a burglar alarm, use it
- Keep sheds, back gates and outdoor buildings locked
- Cancel milk and paper deliveries if going away
- Mark or etch valuable property with your postcode and house number and register items at: www.immobilise.com
- If you see anyone using the scaffolding on your home outside normal working hours, call: 999. Let your insurers know if you have scaffolding erected.

Planning for the future

OPTIONS to minimise the impact of possible flooding in the borough are being assessed by the Council in partnership with the Environment Agency.

All councils across the country have a responsibility to prepare for and manage possible flooding since the Flood and Water Management Act 2010 came into effect. A study is to be carried out after the Council agreed that funding from the Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs should be used for it.

An initial report suggested that two possible ways to alleviate risk in Hackney Wick could be to excavate an area of land on Hackney Marshes adjacent to the Lea Navigation, and to construct a flood defence wall on the west of the Lea Navigation in Hackney Wick. There has been no serious flooding in the area for 64 years, but it is important the Council is prepared.

Much more detailed technical work will be carried out by the Council to determine the most appropriate measures before a decision is made. The Council will engage with community groups as part of this work. It will also continue the multi-million pound investment into the Marshes to ensure residents can enjoy the area's biodiversity and take part in sports and leisure activities.

Royal academy visit

A 120-year-old Hackney school has officially unveiled its new building, packed full of the latest classroom facilities.

Skinner's Academy, in Woodberry Down, was declared open on 12 April with a ceremony attended by pupils, staff and an array of dignitaries.

The £27.2million academy replaces the former Skinner's Company's School for Girls in Stamford Hill.

Now a mixed school, the new building design incorporates eco-friendly features including highly insulated walls, natural ventilation, a biomass boiler, water conservation and biodiversity roofs.

With a 1.4 hectare site, it caters for around 1,150 students and overlooks nearby Alexandra Park.

The Duke of Gloucester unveiled a plaque to mark the official opening. Academy Principal,

Jenny Wilkins, said: "The vision to achieve a first class learning environment fit for the 21st century has been secured in this wonderful learning campus where our students will have the opportunity to learn, succeed and realise their potential in our ever changing society."

Student Samroz Umar, 16, said: "This building is very different to where we were in Stamford Hill. It's much more open and light which makes it easier to learn. I like it so much I am planning to stay here for Sixth Form."

The academy is sponsored by Skinner's Company, a livery firm dating back more than 700 years.

The new school forms part of the Council-led regeneration of Woodberry Down, which includes social rented, private and shared ownership homes, community and health facilities, an extended primary school, and retail and commercial opportunities.

News in brief

Life sentence for Agnes killers

THE killers who gunned down 16-year-old Agnes Sina-Inakoju in a Hoxton takeaway have been jailed for life.

Leon Dunkley, 22, and Mohammed Smoured, 21, were both found guilty of murder and possessing a firearm with intent to endanger life. They were sentenced to 32-year minimum terms at the Old Bailey on 12 April.

Victim Agnes was considered Oxbridge material by her school

The court heard how the shooting on 14 April last year was sparked by a gang feud. The killers, who were in the London Fields gang, had gone to Hoxton Street, N1, in search of rival gang members to avenge an earlier attack on one of their group. They cycled up to the Hoxton Chicken and Pizza shop, where Dunkley pulled out a sub-machine gun and fired through the window, believing rival gang members were inside. Innocent bystander, Agnes, was shot in the neck and fatally wounded. The murder weapon had been used in six other shootings, the court heard.

Two teenagers were convicted of holding weapons on behalf of older members of the London Fields gang. Dwayne Wisdom, 17, was found guilty of assisting an offender, possession of a firearm with intent to endanger life and possession of an imitation firearm. A 16-year-old boy, who cannot be named for legal reasons, was also found guilty of possession of a prohibited firearm. They will be sentenced at a later date.

Detective Chief Inspector John Crossley said: "Agnes was a totally innocent victim who had her whole future ahead of her. These convictions can only be achieved by the courage of members of the public coming forward to give vital evidence. I would like to thank them for the courage they have shown. I would finally like to pay tribute to Agnes's family for the dignity they have shown and our thoughts are with them during this time."

In a victim impact statement Agnes's older brother, Abiola Inakoju, described his sister, as 'full of ambition', and told how she had visited Oxford University, where she hoped to study, the week before her death.

He said: "We still can't believe that she has been taken away from us at such a young age. We are still coming to terms with her loss and the fact that we will never see her again."

Judge Peter Beaumont, the Recorder of London, said the sentence was to act as a deterrent. "Gun violence with loaded weapons that imperils innocent people on the streets has to be stopped," he said. To the killers he added: "Not only have you taken a life, you have destroyed a family's happiness and destroyed your own lives too."

Fun in the sun

THE sun came out for neighbours and friends as they celebrated the Rhodes Estate spring fete on 2 April.

Organised by the local Tenants and Residents Association (TRA), people took the time to 'green up' their estate by planting a range of plants and herbs in communal beds to be enjoyed by everyone.

There were plenty of other activities including sports training for youngsters, a tombola and table top sales for grown ups, as well as traditional party games such as guess the weight of the cake and face painting.

Residents also enjoyed a drumming workshop by Ras Happa, food from the Dalston Farm Shop, and got the chance to the chat with staff from the Arcola Theatre.

Lorne Stefanini, Chair of the Rhodes Estate

TRA said: "We all had a really enjoyable day. It was great to see such a variety of people coming together to support this community event."

"I think everyone who attended feels much more positive about the estate as a result"

"I think everyone who attended feels much more positive about the estate as a result."

Rupert Tyson MBE, Chair of the Hackney Homes Board, said: "The spring sun came out on the day and residents of all ages took time to enjoy themselves in their neighbourhood."

Funding for fun on your estate

AS the sun comes out, Hackney Homes is urging resident groups to apply for funding to get together with neighbours and inject some community spirit into estates. Up to £200 is available to spend on refreshments or activities, and Hackney Homes staff will be on hand to assist with the planning and arrangements for the day. Nightingale Primary School pupils get close up with a colourful array of butterflies at the Natural History Museum

Social butterflies

NIGHTINGALE Primary School pupils were some of the first to encounter a new Natural History Museum exhibition revealing the astonishing habits of butterflies.

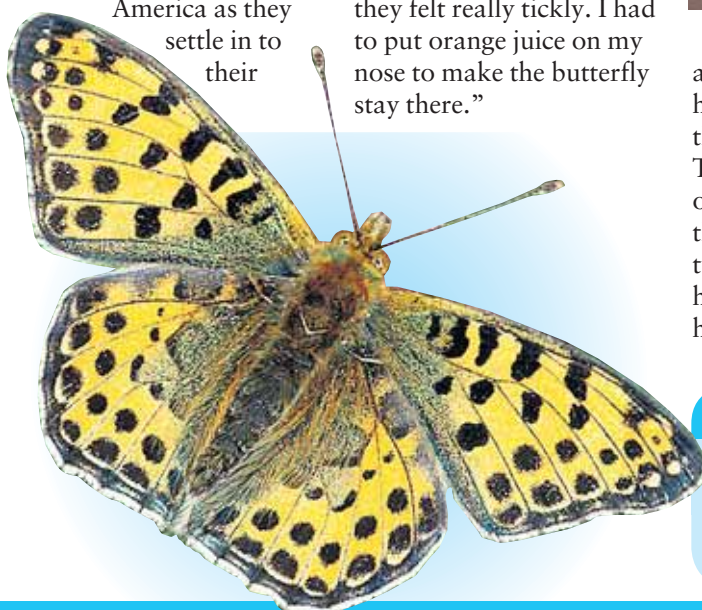

'Sensational Butterflies' includes interactive examples of how a butterfly experiences life, from its struggle to escape the chrysalis to its drive to procreate.

“The butterflies were lots of different colours. It wasn't scary to have butterflies on my hand, it was fun”

In addition, the butterfly house at the Kensington museum will be filled with hundreds of species from Africa, South-East Asia, and North and South America as they settle in to their summer home. Adults and children of all ages can enjoy the exhibition.

Sabina Olchowick, five, said: "The butterflies were sitting on my hands and they felt really tickly. I had to put orange juice on my nose to make the butterfly stay there."

Hanna Gomaa, six, added: "I like the butterfly house and I love the crawl through the chrysalis. The butterflies were lots of different colours and there were lots of different types. It wasn't scary to have butterflies on my hand, it was fun."

All yellow for Forever Young members

In full bloom

AN over-50s group in Homerton has planted more than 1,000 daffodils, turning an overlooked corner of the borough into a flowering garden.

Laying the foundations for a blooming oasis, the Forever Young members shifted nine tonnes of soil and laid timber sleepers to create flower beds. The 'Colouring in Kingsmead' initiative aims to brighten neglected spaces and is supported by the London Organising Committee for the Olympic Games and Sanctuary Housing. Community worker Carly Bond said: "The over-50s sometimes get told that the best of their life is over. We aren't into nostalgia so much as being people who can make a difference. And small actions count."

Forever Young emphasises being active and offers a varied programme on Monday afternoons at the Wally Foster Community Centre, Homerton Road, E9; plus a gardening group on Wednesdays at Kingsmead Way Community Garden, E9. For more info, call: 07850 370 222; or: 07956 247 173.

Your census form matters

RESIDENTS who have not completed and returned their census forms are being urged to do so ahead of a 6 May deadline to help make sure Hackney gets all the Government funding it is due for vital local services.

Money for the borough's health services, education, housing and social care is calculated using census information so if households don't return their form, it could have a big impact on services.

Personal information is kept completely confidential by law and stored in a way that makes it impossible to identify an individual or household. Information won't be shared with the Council or any other organisation, no matter what your circumstances, but a response is required by law.

Three quarters of a million trees, plants and shrubs will be planted in the Olympic Park

First trip to the Park

THE first members of the borough's 2012 volunteer force – the Hackney Hosts – enjoyed a day out with a difference when they took a bus tour of the Olympic Park.

They were shown all the new venues, saw landscaping taking place, and had a closer look at the Olympic Village, which will eventually boast 2,880 apartments, as well as a polyclinic, shops and a school.

"It was very inspiring, an eye opener," said

Stoke Newington resident and father-of-one Gary Colman. He added: "I was surprised at how big the area is, and at the size of the Olympic stadium, and how much work's involved. I think it will rejuvenate the area; and kids will have something to look forward to."

Tour guide, Tim Martin, was keen to share his knowledge of 2012 facts and figures. For example, by bringing in 60 per cent of materials by water or rail, developers are keeping thousands of lorries off the road. Or that three quarters of a million trees, plants and shrubs will be planted in the Park.

By the end of this summer, 100 residents will have been recruited as Hackney Hosts. They will receive free training in first aid and presentation skills; learn all about the Games, and be supported to find paid work as part of the programme, which is run by the Council and Peabody housing trust.

Many of the hosts have also chosen to become 2012 Champions, helping to promote the Olympic ethos and Games-related activities in the community.

The first group of hosts have already helped out at a jobs fair and with the 2011 Census, and next month, they will provide support for the New Age Games – Hackney's programme of free activities for over 50s.

Paul Monks in the Core Arts garden in Homerton

ON the walls of Core Arts' main stage, an oil painting of St Mary's Church is being hung as part of a stunning new exhibition at the mental health charity.

"I did them," one exhibitor says with cool charm, adding he first discovered Core Arts when it was based at the old Hackney hospital almost 20 years ago. It offers workshops and creative arts for people with mental health difficulties. Led by professional artists and musicians, courses include song-writing, technical software and art classes. It also runs a number of social enterprises, which members can work for.

But founder Paul Monks is keen to point out its attendees are anything but 'charity cases', rather 'they are getting tools for self reliance'. Core Arts doesn't use clinical techniques or employ therapy staff – encouraging creativity is the main goal.

He says: "We create an environment that is non-threatening, where you don't have to worry about diagnosis or symptoms; you can share common dreams – be that to have an exhibition or perform on stage for the first time. Everything else is a by-product."

To join, individuals must have at least one recent hospital admission and be in contact with Hackney's mental health services.

Goals are then chosen by individuals, with support from staff and teachers.

Facilities include art rooms, a stage area, music studios, computer rooms, pottery kiln and garden spaces. In one studio, a member is producing a stirring symphony single-handedly; in another, someone else is in the early stages of learning portrait drawing.

Paul says: "There are different steps for different people. The majority have been in hospital, classed as having an enduring mental health problem. We get some good arts results, but more important is improving well being."

Around 80 per cent of Core Arts trustees – who strategically direct the charity – are current or previous members and this ensures the charity keeps offering what students want. Paul says: "It can be frightening when you're locked up and treated as unwell. So it's useful to have people on the staff who new members can empathise with – who have made the journey themselves."

A trained artist himself, Paul is candid about setting up the charity in the early 1990s, after a colourful career that up to that point had seen him work as a set artist with Spitting Image and teaching in Nigeria.

He says: "I just wanted a free studio and was sick of paying rent. A purely selfish act, but it ended up being a really interesting time. Most of the hospital was closed, just the psychiatric wards were left. I kept my door open and met lots of people who had no money, or were homeless and living in tunnels. Some would muck around with the paints, so I'd set up shows for them, but mix it up with art students, so you wouldn't know whose work was whose."

It is this focus on the artist, rather than the disability, that became key to Core Arts when it was formally established in 1994. The hospital room, first offered in 1992, was extended to a ward, then a block. Following the hospital's full closure, Core Arts transferred to its current home at St Barnabus Terrace, E9, and now around 320 members use its facilities a year. Funding comes through the Council and local NHS, along with support from 15 other local authorities, lottery grants and general fundraising.

Paul is hoping to increase the charity's self-sufficiency with a landscaping business, which sees members redesign outdoor spaces for payment. Homerton hospital is on its growing client list. As well as raising money for the charity, it does much to reduce the stigma of mental health.

Paul says: "It's value for money and offers good outcomes on top. Think how good it must feel to go back there in control? For members, you can learn something new every week, do a few hours work, just that can mean a lot."

Larry Julian, Cllr Demirci and Simon Musther, BiogenGreenfinch Head of Commercial Operations, at Ridley Road Market

UNWANTED fruit and veg from three of Hackney's street markets is to be used to create green electricity.

Waste food from Hoxton, Broadway and Ridley Road markets will be collected by specialist recycling company BiogenGreenfinch.

The markets currently throw away almost a thousand tonnes of waste food a year – equivalent to 56million strawberries.

Up until now unsold food has had to be sent to landfill, where it adds to environmental pollution.

Rotting food gives off methane gas, which is 25 times more destructive than carbon dioxide. In the new programme, methane is captured to generate electricity while all that is left is a liquid fertiliser.

Larry Julian, Chair of Ridley Road Market Traders' Association, said: "My family has had fruit and vegetable stalls on Ridley Road market for generations. It's amazing to think that our unwanted cauliflower leaves and cabbage stalks can now be turned into electricity."

“It's amazing to think that our unwanted cauliflower leaves and cabbage stalks can now be turned into electricity”

Apart from the massive environmental benefit, not sending the waste food to landfill will save Council Tax payers money.

Cllr Feryal Demirci, Cabinet Member for Neighbourhoods, said: "At Hackney Council we are always looking for ways to make the borough greener. Turning food waste into electricity really helps us in our sustainability agenda."

Richard Barker, Chief Executive of BiogenGreenfinch, added: "Anaerobic Digestion is the Government's preferred method for getting rid of food waste because all the science shows it creates the most benefit. We're delighted to be teaming up with Hackney Council."

Channeling youth and energy

DALSTON'S Arcola Theatre is urging teachers and pupils to get involved in its Energy For Schools programme.

The Arcola – which aims to become Britain's first carbon neutral theatre – officially launched the programme during Climate Week from 21-27 March. Over 150 young people from across London got a chance to find out more about the science behind living greener lifestyles in a fun and interactive way. Pupils from Clapton Girls' Technology College were among those taking part in activities over the week.

One Year Eight participant said: "It was an amazing workshop that demonstrated the fascinating science behind renewable energy possibilities. I would love to come back and do it again."

There was a chance to build wind turbines, build and race hydrogen powered cars, and to create mood lamps and artwork using a range of recycled materials. Workshops are tailored to the curriculum and can be delivered in the classroom or at the theatre.

Arcola is aiming to offer the programme to more than 1,000 children over the next 12 months.

Profitable hedge fun

VOLUNTEERS from Well Street Common User Group have helped Council staff to plant a hawthorn hedge.

The group turned out on 3 April to plant the hedge along the Meynell Road side of Well Street Common, E9.

The Council has also removed an old bollard fence to make the site more attractive and easier for people to enjoy.

The hawthorn hedge, although it will take time to develop, should become valuable for wildlife. It provides food through nectar and berries, places for birds to nest, and a natural 'corridor' to allow wildlife to move around the common.

The hedge planting is part of the Council's commitment to creating more areas for wildlife across the borough.

Residents can get involved by joining Hackney's Biodiversity Partnership.

East End Film Festival

Various locations, 27 April-2 May

FROM cockled eels and curries to The Krays and calalou, the 'right' side of London has always been proud of its rich and diverse history.

In part, East End Film Festival's success emulates this: an event with its own unique identity, much like many of the films inspired or created by local people.

The 10-year-old festival takes place at venues across East London, with Dalston's Rio Cinema serving as a key location. With an emphasis on homegrown talent, films include a love note to 24-hour party culture in Kanchi Wichmann's 'Break My Fall' at Rio Cinema (29 April). A day later, East End filmmaker Emma-Louise Williams shows 'Under The Cranes' (30 April), a documentary feature shot in Hackney that uses a script from Dalston poet Michael Rosen.

There's also a night of short films made by Hackney residents, including Michael Please's 2011 BAFTA winning animation 'The Eagleman Stag' and 'East End True-Life Stories', showing as part of Dalston's Land of Kings festival.

A Royal Scratch Night

REVIEW

Lines and My Name is Rachel Corrie

Rosemary Branch Theatre, 2 Shepperton Rd, N1

Until 30 April

A DOUBLE bill of political plays at the Rosemary Branch is currently offering one of the most thought provoking and value for money nights out in the capital. First up, 'Lines' is an innovative piece of meta-theatre – about a play within a play, which focuses on the murder of an actor by the person he was meant to portray. The victim's parents, a playwright, the director and a police officer all give their accounts of what happened and where it went wrong. It's a twisted tale of pointing fingers that asks questions about how much should be permitted by artistic license and whether artists can ever be held responsible for real-life consequences. Gripping and emotional story with glimpses of black humour, Lines owes much of its success to a cast giving stellar performances.

'My Name is Rachel Corrie' is an intimate coming of age story based entirely on a real life American activist's diary entries and e-mails before her death in 2003.

We meet Rachel when she is a joyous teenager without any life plans bar a resolution she won't let it become meaningless.

She gets involved in activism, eventually landing her in Gaza as a part of peaceful resistance group. By the play's end her questions on morality become ours and we leave the theatre, probably as intended, unnerved. The world may have heard more about Rachel if she hadn't been tragically killed in Israel. In all, a full evening of quality theatre leaving you wanting nothing more except, as the weather gets hotter, a little bit of air conditioning.

On a pedestal

A HACKNEY boy's design for a prestigious art award made a final short list from a record 500 competition entries.

Pupils from every London borough entered the Fourth Plinth Schools Awards to create a public artwork that could be displayed on the fourth plinth of Nelson's Column in Trafalgar Square. 'Gender' by Joel Davids, 14, of Hackney Free and Parochial School, was judged the best entry from Hackney, and is in keeping with the art programme's move away from the male dominated, often war-related statues that have historically graced the square. Joel said: "I was so pleased, especially when I saw how good the other entries were." His art teacher, Patrick Sanders, added: "The artwork promotes a positive message of peace and equality. We are all very proud of Joel."

The competition was judged by Yinka Shonibare whose artwork 'Nelson's Ship in a Bottle' currently adorns the Fourth Plinth. Joel's artwork, along with the overall winners and other finalists, will be on display at City Hall, SE1, until the end of April.

'Outstanding'

TWO reinvigorated borough schools are enjoying success after receiving high marks from Ofsted inspectors.

In a remarkable turnaround, London Fields primary in E8 was rated 'outstanding' – the highest Ofsted grade possible – after being deemed a failing school in the education watchdog's last inspection four years ago.

Special school Horizon was classed as 'good', with some areas 'outstanding', improving on a 'satisfactory' rating in 2008.

Special measures were put in place at London Fields primary in 2007 to closely monitor the school – such moves can result in closure,

Staff and pupils from London Fields (above) and Horizon (right) but this March, the Ofsted report stated: "Pupils' achievement is outstanding, not only in their acquisition of literacy and numeracy skills, but also the skills needed to learn effectively. The quality of teaching is consistently excellent across the school."

It added that 'the pace of learning is unrelenting'.

Executive head teacher,

Greg Wallace, said: "I am delighted that the hard work and dedication of staff, pupils and parents at London Fields has been recognised."

Inspectors also found that things had radically changed at Horizon School, in Stoke Newington, which caters for pupils with special educational needs. Their report noted that pupils make excellent progress in their learning. KT Khan, Horizon's new head teacher, said: "We are on our way to becoming an outstanding school and are looking forward to being a Centre of Excellence for young people with complex needs."

Cllr Rita Krishna, Cabinet Member for Children's Services, said: "Both these schools have made great strides in improvement, which Ofsted justly recognises. It is gratifying to see yet more good schools securing a good future for Hackney's children."

News in brief

Let's dance

WAS it abstract athleticism or arty fun? For some Hackney primary school pupils, probably somewhere in between, as they experienced the physical demands of being a professional dancer.

Rambert Dance Company brought contemporary dance to youngsters, leading technique and choreography workshops at seven borough primaries: Berger; Morningside; Lauriston; Orchard; and St Dominic's, all in E9; Daubeney, E5; and Wentworth Nursery, E9.

The work culminated with a show at Trinity Laban Conservatoire of Music and Dance, in Greenwich, on 1 April. A 200-strong audience watched the four to nine-year-olds perform routines inspired by Christopher Bruce's award-winning 'Hush' and samba-inspired 'A Linha Curva' by Itzik Galili – both from the Rambert repertoire.

Joce Giles, Rambert's head of learning and participation, said: "It was fantastic; the facilities at Laban are wonderful so it was great for the young dancers to have the opportunity to rehearse and perform in a professional venue. The performance went really well and the feedback has been really positive."

He added the children gained understanding and experience of an art form they may not have engaged with before.

Computer surprise

PUPILS at the City Academy in Hackney are to receive lap tops donated by City firm KPMG.

The company is giving over 1,000 computers, worth £100,000, to 100 schools and charities throughout the UK.

City Academy will benefit because KPMG is its co-sponsor, but a number of Hackney-based organisations such as St John at Hackney Church, Arcola Theatre and the East London Business Association are also set to gain.

Father Rob Wickham, Rector of St John at Hackney, (above) said the computers had come as a 'wonderful surprise'. Members of a new joint youth club with St Thomas's Church in Upper Clapton, as well as older people's group 'The Senior Saints' will use the equipment. Mike Kelly, Head of Corporate Social Responsibility at KPMG, said they wanted to put their old computers to good use. "We hope this donation will make a difference," he added.

Home is where the art is

The 'Possible Damage' team including Hailey (fourth from right) at Rivington Place, just off Shoreditch High Street. Exhibition details (right and top)

By Hailey Ford, 24

I MOVED away from the quiet little hub of my university town last summer to Hackney on a whim.

I had graduated from the University for the Creative Arts, in Farnham, with a BA in Photography, and was trying to find affordable housing in London. I quickly realised I had chosen a great place to continue my artistic practice. It wasn't long until I found Iniva, a fantastic organisation right on my doorstep, whom I have been working with since November 2010. Iniva's aim is to work with artists, curators, producers, and writers, as a way of developing ideas and stimulating debate. These ideas often reflect the cultural diversity of society, resulting in a final exhibition, and often live performances.

Being a part of Iniva has enabled a group of like-minded people to form a meaningful network, and gather valuable, practical experiences in the exhibition process.

After six months of hard work, 'Possible Damage' is now exhibiting at Rivington Place, just off Shoreditch High Street. The display has developed as a response to student protests against the rise in tuition fees and education cuts.

Iniva has helped me through the difficult transition from student to practising artist and I intend to work with them again. Until then, I will be working as an artist individually, and as part of a collective called Wandering Bears.

MORE INFO

There will be a performance lecture from the artists on Possible Damage on 30 April at 3pm. The exhibition runs until 14 May. For more info visit: www.iniva.org

NEWS IN BRIEF

Is your Facebook page a tool, a distraction or an addiction?

A dangerous open book?

IS Facebook a small distraction or big addiction? Tolunay Kaygusuz, 14, wants your opinion.

Did you know that if Facebook were a country, it would be the fifth largest in the world? Or that people spend more than 700 billion minutes per month on Facebook? So is online life taking over?

Facebook has evolved to offer access on the move. There are more than 200 million active members currently using the site from their mobile devices – that's 40 per cent of the people on Facebook.

However brilliant the social network site may be, like any other amazing thing it has its downside. It can get very addictive and unless you know how to control yourself (which most of us don't) you will keep going back to it, so it can get very time consuming.

On the other hand there are many advantages. It can help to find old friends. You can decide on what you're going to be doing with your weekend, or find out what your friends are doing.

Taking both sides into account, I think the pros outweigh the cons. The fact that your details are out there for anyone to see can now be changed with the privacy settings so only your friends can access your profile. Facebook feels a lot safer than it once did. So in conclusion I think Facebook is safe and isn't a problem. Good or bad? What do you think? E-mail: journalist@yhworld.co.uk

Down by the river

THE Hackney Young Photographers (HYP) are getting ready for their exhibition.

Organised by Ourspace, a youth-led social initiative that aims to reduce knife crime, the exhibition will be a collaboration between youth-led charity, Art Against Knives, YH World and Agenda.

The exhibition will showcase some of the shots they have taken of other creative young people.

But in this edition of Hackney Today, YH World shows off some very different photography from HYP's Firdaus Yusuf, 15.

Firdaus explains: "This picture was taken minutes away from my house in Clapton, near the river. It was a really hot day so I just went out and took some pictures and this was one of the first I took.

"This picture stands out because of the reflection of the water and the way the houses and canal boat are lined up next to each other."

Good grub guide

The Great Grub Club and Professor Foodsmart fill up with healthy snacks

IS a professor of food about to get more Hackney children eating healthily?

The charity World Cancer Research Fund (WCRF) hopes he can, along with other comic book characters in 'The Great Grub Club'. The charity has developed a Hackney and Tower Hamlets-focused initiative to help youngsters ditch junk food and boost physical activity among four to seven-year-olds. Young members can join the free club and receive four activity magazines a year, as well as a membership pack, poster, badge and stickers. Andy Wilks, from WCRF, said the boroughs were chosen because – according to a 2008 Department of Health report – they both have low levels of physical activity among children and high levels of early adult deaths from cancer. While the comic book materials do not overtly link healthy living and cancer prevention, they do aim to develop healthy habits that can reduce the risk of developing the disease in later life.

Health trust savings

EAST London NHS Foundation Trust has announced proposals to save £10.2million by April 2012.

The trust which provides mental health and community health care services for Hackney – as well as the City, Newham and Tower Hamlets – said around £7.6million will come from efficiency savings from a range of clinical services and 'back office functions'. This figure is in line with a four per cent cut in its total annual budget, as required by NHS central office. Another £1.3million is set to come from reductions in child and adolescent mental health services (CAMHS) due to a cut in funding. Other money saving proposals include a reduction in non-pay related expenditure.

Over 90 posts are due to be deleted in CAMHS and community services for adults across the trust area. However it is understood that suitable alternative employment will be made available to the majority of staff at risk. The trust's Chief Executive, Dr Robert Dolan, said: "We are committed to working with our staff to avoid redundancies, and are confident that, for most staff affected by these changes, we will find suitable posts within the organisation. For some CAMHS specialist staff, this will be more difficult as there may not be suitable employment within the organisation."

He added that all NHS bodies are being asked to contribute to a 20 per cent 'productivity improvement'.

A further reduction in services to the value of £3.2million will need to be identified in 2012/13.

East London NHS Foundation Trust is now consulting with its employees on the proposals.

News in brief

Three become one

THE three primary care trusts (PCTs) serving Hackney and the City, Newham and Tower Hamlets have now merged to form NHS East London and the City.

All three management teams are now working together, with Alwen Williams becoming Chief Executive. NHS East London and the City will commission health services from GPs and pharmacists, support the development of GP commissioning practices, and provide advice on improving health and reducing its inequalities.

Following a Government white paper published last year, all PCTs and strategic health authorities are to be abolished in 2013. Functions such as commissioning health services are set to be transferred from PCTs to GPs.

Social care survey results

FEEDBACK from local people has influenced an action plan to help the Council provide information and advice about health, wellbeing, and adult social care.

A survey asked what residents thought of the services currently on offer in the borough as part of an information, advice and advocacy consultation earlier this year. Cllr Jonathan McShane, Cabinet Member for Health and Community Services, said: "The response to the consultation was fantastic. The majority of people who returned surveys are older and in receipt of services from the Council, giving us important details about how people who are not as likely to use the internet prefer to get information and advice."

The results show that help, support, and keeping healthy are the most important subjects, with post, face-to-face contact, and newspapers being the most popular channels for information. For those who are not housebound, doctor's surgeries and the Hackney Service Centre are popular places to get information and advice.

To find out more about the action plan and how it will enable people to get information and advice more easily, visit: hackneytrasc.wordpress.com

Residents who took part in the survey have provided the Council with important information on the services they use

The Mayor and Councillors

Councillors are elected by Hackney residents and serve for four years. The last borough elections were in May 2010.

Councillors have a range of responsibilities, including helping to oversee the Council and its services. They hold advice surgeries where residents can meet their local representative and ask them to take up issues that may be of concern.

Generally they can help with Council related matters, but if the issue is the responsibility of another person or organisation, councillors can often point people in the right direction and tell residents who they need to see.

Hackney has 57 councillors representing areas called wards – illustrated in the map opposite.

Passmore notes

Clockwise from above: illustration from 1900 publication 'Passmore Edwards Institutions' showing Shoreditch Library before its extension; a bust commissioned by Shoreditch Public Libraries from sculptor Sir George Frampton, now in the Passmore Edwards Library, St Ives, Cornwall; response from Passmore Edwards to an invitation to the unveiling of the bust in 1899; Passmore Edwards photo, c1900

THIS month people in Cornwall are marking the centenary of the death of their most famous philanthropist and benefactor.

John Passmore Edwards' generosity resulted in the founding of 70 major buildings across the country – including two libraries in Shoreditch – and a number of local drinking fountains.

Born in the village of Blackwater, near Redruth, in 1823, Passmore Edwards was the son of William Edwards and his wife Susan Passmore. The family were not well off, but William managed to find two pence each per week for the education of his four sons.

Passmore Edwards was still a teenager when he first 'nurtured an ambition to become known and useful in some way'. Initially this involved the successful running of a free school teaching literacy to men and boys, but attempts at public speaking and publishing were a failure.

By chance he met a representative from the London 'Sentinel' newspaper who offered him a post as agent for the paper in Manchester, with a tempting annual salary of £40. The newspaper was a failure and the salary actually £10, but Passmore Edwards did manage to earn a few extra shillings through lecturing on temperance and politics.

After 15 months he headed for London to become a journalist and lecturer. He founded some successful publications of his own, and in 1876 he became the owner of 'The Echo', Britain's first half-penny evening newspaper, which made his fortune.

After failing to win the seat for Truro in 1868, Passmore Edwards was elected MP for Salisbury in 1880, but he did not enjoy politics and turned instead to founding public buildings and institutions, including hospitals, libraries, schools, convalescence homes, art galleries, as well as drinking fountains. The first public library opened in London in 1868, no more were built however, much to Passmore Edwards' disgust, so he paid for 24 libraries across the country between 1889 and 1904.

Haggerston Library in Kingsland Road was opened in May 1893 by the Duke of Devonshire. There was also a large garden 'where the public could promenade on fine evenings and readers could enjoy a book and a pipe'. The library was so popular that within three years it was extended, again through Passmore Edwards' patronage at a total cost of £6,250, reopening on the same day in 1896 as the foundation stone was laid for another new library in Pitfield Street, Hoxton.

As well as the two libraries and 4,000 books to fill their shelves, Passmore Edwards also funded drinking fountains in Hoxton Square (no longer working); Albion Square (recently restored to working order); Hackney Road; Stonebridge Common; and Victoria Park (all no longer standing).

Twice Passmore Edwards was offered a knighthood and turned it down: he felt philanthropy was always for the good of his fellow-man rather than for self-glory. 'By vigilant work and fairly good luck I have become the custodian of a certain number of sovereigns, which came mostly from the labours of working-men, and my desire is that these sovereigns, or most of them, should flow back to the fountain from which they mainly derived.'

John Passmore Edwards died, aged 87, on 22 April 1911, at his home in Hampstead, leaving £47,000 to his wife and children, the final recipients of his generosity.

- Blitz all the pastry ingredients in a food processor (or crumble with your fingers)
- Wrap and place in fridge for 30 mins
- Peel, core and slice apples, and cover immediately with lemon juice
- Add sugar, cinnamon and raisins
- Grease a nine inch round dish or cake tin
- Roll out $\frac{3}{4}$ of the pastry and line the tin
- Fill this with the apple mix and include any juice, this will soak into the pastry and create the sticky-cakey-loveliness we're looking for
- Make strips with the remaining pastry and create a lattice on top
- Bake for around 45 minutes at 160°C
- Serve with whipped cream hot or cold
